

UNBOXING ABLEISM WITH DYLAN MARRON

DYLAN: Even woke people use this product and have no idea. Today, I'm unboxing ableism.

Hey, friends, I'm Dylan Marron, unboxing the most pervasive concept sold in the cultural marketplace and today, I'm looking into a product that I had no idea I owned until many of you requested that I unbox it. Let's dig in, look inward and own up to some hard [bleep].

Right when you open it up, you will notice the "r" word. This is not a great word but it really comes in handy when you want to describe something and prove to people that you've never encountered a thesaurus. Tack this on to the front of nouns as a way to subtly brag about your insensitivity and lack of creativity. You're multi-faceted!

Sick! It is a crowbar. Embedded subtitles are really helpful for people who are hearing impaired but totally disregard that if you feel it aesthetically gets in the way of your video.

[Grunting]

Instead, opt for auto-subtitles, which often get the words wrong and make your video totally unwatchable for a large portion of the population.

Huh... it is... a microphone. Um... oh, right! So, this is just, um, a sweet reminder that this product doesn't at all get in the way of your presidential candidacy. In fact, when you use this product to imitate a reporter with a physical disability, your supporters will say that you just "tell it like it is" and that you're brave for not caring about political correctness. Go, you!

Oh, my god! Oh, my god! It is an acting award. Wow! Witness arts academies honor able-bodied actors over and over again for pretending they have a disability. Applaud their calculated performance of a lifestyle they've never lived because after all, they're method actors and they put two whole months of grueling research into this role.

[Applause]

Thank you. Thank you.

Alright. So, the last thing in here is a box of tissues. I have no idea why it's here. Oh. Um. Well... I get it. Um, so, it's just so that you can, like, misguidedly think that every person with a disability just, like, lives to inspire you. Um, and you can... keep these handy so that when you approach a stranger in a wheelchair, you can just tell them how proud you are of them, even though they're probably just eager to get on with their day. But just know that their existence is really mostly about you.

[Crying and nose blowing]

It's just so inspiring.

Well, friends, that is it for me. Unfortunately, you might have bought this product without knowing but the good news is that it is totally refundable!

Bye!
